Serving the Economic Interests of Sickness Industries

Since Alternative Health is based on wellness by natural means and is a trend growing globally, it's become a threat to pharmaceutical profits. This is where Codex Alimentarius (World Food Code) comes in.

Codex Alimentarius Commission (CAC) was created in 1962 as a trade commission by the UN to control the international trade of food. It's now controlled by corporate interests, most notably the pharmaceutical, pesticide, biotechnology and chemical industries. Codex Alimentarius is supported by the trade sanctions of the World Trade Organization (WTO). Any non-compliant nation would face huge economic punishment since they would automatically lose in any food-trade dispute with a Codex compliant country.

There are two committees dealing with nutrition in the CAC. One of them, the Codex Committee on Nutrition and Foods for Special Dietary Uses, is chaired by Dr. Rolf Grossklaus, a physician who believes "nutrition has no role in health" In 1994 declared that nutrients are toxins. and instituted the use of toxicology (Risk Assessment) to prevent nutrients having any impact on humans who take supplements. This is a conflict of interest as he owns the Risk Assessment company that makes money when its toxicology services are used for the "assessment" of nutrients.

Codex is made up of thousands of standards and guidelines. One of them, The Vitamin and Mineral Guideline, is designed to permit only ultra low doses of vitamins and minerals (and make clinically effective nutrients illegal.)

Codex is spending billions of dollars on a massive media campaign as a benevolent tool of "consumer protection" and at the same time negatively taints the image of natural health options to mislead people to fear them as "dangerous."

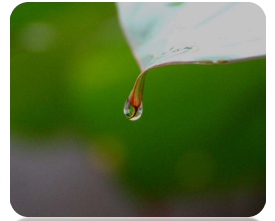

The WTO intends to force Codex Alimentarius upon the nations of the world, including the U.S. This would be under the threat of massive economic sanctions if WTO countries do not comply with Codex Alimentarius. Codex is based on the Napoleonic Code, not Common law. That means that under the Codex Alimentarius, anything not explicitly permitted is forbidden.

Fortunately the 1994 Dietary Supplement Health and Education Act (DSHEA), an American law classifying our supplements and herbs as foods (which can have no upper limit set on their use), was passed by unanimous Congressional consent following a massive grass-roots support organized by health food stores. Millions of American activists told Congress, in no uncertain terms, “Protect nutritional supplements as foods or we will remove you from office.”

The objective of the pro-Codex Alimentarius multi nationals is to “boil the frog slowly” so that we don’t wake up in time to avoid Codex. Codex Alimentarius will go into global implementation by December 31, 2009 unless, We, the People, avert it. Act now because with $758 Million spent on declared Congressional lobbying by Big Pharma last year, there are members of Congress who are trying to overturn DSHEA and allow Pharma-Friendly free reign for Codex.
